Natural... Wood Cabinetry

No two pieces of wood are the same – even from the same tree. These differences in natural grain and color mean that each piece will respond differently to the finishing process. It also explains why there are variations between cabinets and within a single door or drawer front.

Over time, all wood species will exhibit color changes to some degree. Exposure to sunlight, smoke and chemicals may cause wood to fade or change from the original color. It's only natural...

Characteristic of Maple Doors

Maple is an extremely hard wood with a fine texture. Its natural colors range from creamy white to light blonde tones to dark reddish-browns. So it is possible to have color variation within a single door. As with other wood species, darker stains will reduce the color variations.

Maple may contain some wavy, curly, bird's eye or burl graining as well as mineral streaks and worm tracking across the grain that will darken when stained. These characteristics are a natural part of the wood and not considered defects, but what makes it so appealing and attracting.
